

TERROR REIGNS IN BLOODY 19TH

Death Patrols Streets of Chicago's Bomb Ward in Little Italy.

BULLETIN

CHICAGO, May 26.—The feudists in the bloody 19th reached out and picked another victim today.

Michael Laccari, lieutenant of the late Anthony D'Andrea, political chieftain who was assassinated recently, was riddled with bullets in his saloon. He moved from the 19th following the assassination of D'Andrea but that failed to save his life.

CHICAGO, May 26.—Little Italy, Chicago's "bloody nineteenth" ward, was sitting on top of a volcano today.

None of the thousands of residents in the feud-torn section of the city are sure of their lives. Death by a bomb or fusillade of shots fired from ambush may be dealt out at any time, without warning.

The turbulent history of the nineteenth ward started when Tony D'Andrea, who had studied for the priesthood in Italy, gave up his career and immigrated to Chicago.

The debonair and scholarly D'Andrea went into the ward and strove for political power. The climax of his stormy career came recently when 13 shots were fired into his body from ambush. He died a few days later.

D'Andrea entered politics in 1914, when he ran for county commissioner. He was defeated. In 1916, for the first time, he contested the seat in city council of Alderman John Powers, who has represented the ward twenty-five years.

A bitter campaign followed, during which Frank Lombardi, adherent of the opposing faction, was slain in a saloon.

"Your health," cried his assassins, lifting their glasses.

"Health!" echoed the doomed man. As he raised his glass, guns blared and he fell behind the bar, shot through the head. D'Andrea lost the election but his power continued to grow.

A few months ago hostilities broke out again, when Powers and D'Andrea were contesting in the aldermanic elections.

The home of Powers was bombed. Later, the political headquarters of D'Andrea was wrecked by an infernal machine when 300 of his lieutenants were meeting. Three were seriously injured.

Again D'Andrea was beaten at the polls. The day after election Garcano Esposito, a Powers worker, was tossed out of a speeding auto in the heart of the ward—his body riddled with bullets. Harry Raymond, a Powers aide, was found murdered the same day.

Then came the murder of Paul Labriola, municipal court deputy bailiff and a Powers lieutenant. He was shot down while going to work.

Threats of reprisals were heard. The shooting of D'Andrea followed.

Trees Need Care

Trees need care, just as does anything, to keep them in proper condition. A tree that has a number of defects can easily be brought back to a healthy state with but a little attention—and it is much easier and more economical to correct the defects of a matured tree, than to plant new trees. It takes quite a number of years for a tree to reach maturity, and you lose the value of the tree while it is growing. Save the matured tree. It pays.

Let the tree expert save your trees.
